Fragile Accords Face Obstacles By Jim Hoagland

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18 (WP)

— The two separate peace accords signed last night by President Anwar Sadat of Egypt and Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel offer a chance for a Middle East peace. But they are so fragile that they could be torn apart quickly by the respective political allies of the Egyptian and Israeli leaders.

Mr. Sadat appears to be taking the greatest risk by giving up the most on principle: He has opened the way to signing a separate peace with Israel without getting, at the same time, an Israeli promise to give back all of the Arab lands occupied in the 1967 war.

In return, he can get back all of the Sinai peninsula within three years. As outlined last night by U.S. officials in a background briefing and then in public by President Carter at the signing ceremony, there are no provisions in the Sinai document that hinge on the agreement that covers the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

That is a major victory for Mr. Begin, who essentially has succeed-ed in getting Mr. Sadat to accept a modified version of the Israeli 26point plan for autonomy on the West Bank that the Egyptians rejected last December.

The Israeli leader, facing camera, and Egyptian president embrace at White House ceremony.

News Analysis

The major changes accepted by Mr. Begin in the plan are the stationing of United Nations peacekeeping forces and early warning monitoring stations on the West Bank during the five-year interim period, and the pulling back of 1sraeli troops into garrisons on the West Bank and in Gaza during that period These steps apparently are seen by Mr. Sadat and the U.S. team that worked on the summit meeting as the wedge they can use to convince the Israelis that their security needs can be met by such arrange ments, and that ultimately all Israei troops and control can be withdrawn from the West Bank and

Also, Jordan is being invited to join the negotiations and offered a role in the security arrangements on the West Bank during the interim.

U.S. Desegregation Advocate Refutes Own Study 'More Complicated Than Any of Us Realized'

By Lawrence Feinberg

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18 (WP) — Sociologist James Coleman, whose study in the mid-1960s has been widely used to support school desegregation, now says that it is a mistaken belief" that black students learn better in integrated classrooms.

During the last decade, Mr. Coleman said, research throughout the United States has shown that "it is not the case that school desegregation, as it has been carried out in American schools, generally brings achievement benefits to disadvantaged [black] children."

In some situations, Mr. Coleman said, desegregation has brought slight gains in black achievement, but in many others there has been no change or a slight loss.

Even though he had argued a decade ago that "integration would bring about achievement benefits," Mr. Coleman said, "it has not worked out this way in many of the school desegregation cases since that research. Thus, what once appeared to be fact is now known to be fiction." Mr. Coleman, of the University of Chicago, presented his new conclusions in a paper last April. He repeated them in an interview during the weekend.

More Complicated

"Desegregation has turned out to be much more complicated than any of us ever realized," Mr. Coleman said. "There appear to be beneficial effects for some black kids, those who are better students, and harmful effects for blacks who are poorer students.

It all seems to balance out, which is quite the reverse of the implications of my own research [in the mid-1960s]."

Mr. Coleman's 1966 report. called "Equality of Educational Opportunity," was authorized by Congress in the 1964 Civil Rights Act and sponsored by the U.S. Office of Education. It still is the most extensive piece of educational research ever conducted. involving tests and surveys of about 600,000 students and 60,000 teachers in 4,000 U.S.

schools. Its most widely noted conclusions were that the social-class composition of a school had more impact on student achievement than either resources or teaching methods, and that lower-class black children scored higher on standardized tests in schools with a middle-class white majority than they did in schools where the children were poor and

'Educational Resources' Mr. Coleman emphasized that the achievement gain occurred not because of skin color, but because of the middle-class background and "educational resources" that many white children bring from bome. After his report, Mr. Coleman expressed his views widely, not in testimony before congressional committees and in school-desegregation cases in courts. Among them was Julius Hobson's suit against the Washington school system. Mr. Cole-

only in scholarly articles, but also

Judge Skelly Wright to support the court's finding that "Negro students' educational achievement improves when they transfer into white or integrated educational institutions Mr. Coleman said that he now believes this view is "incorrect wishful thinking." Mr. Coleman said that the difference between his conclusions of a decade ago and the subse-quent results of desegregation reflect two main factors: a difference in the way desegregation has been carried out, and the availability of new research. In 1965, when he collected his data, Mr. Coleman said that nearly all black children attending integrated schools in the South were well motivated volun-

The last known passenger flight for the Soviet SST was June 6. Weekly commercial SST service be-tween Moscow and Alma-Ata was initiated last Nov. 1 in conjunction with the 60th anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution. The exact number of Tu-144 pas-

In the trilateral exchange of praise at the signing ceremony, Mr. Sadat made it clear that he would go home and tell his Arab audience that he signed the accords because the Carter administration has promised to deliver a final agreement that will get back the territories lost in 1967.

If the Knesset agrees to give up the settlements, by Dec. 17, Egypt and Israel are committed to sign a separate and binding peace treaty. In Israeli opinion, the most con-troversial step Mr. Begin has taken probably is his agreement to suspend new settlements on the West Bank during the five-year interim period.

Congressional sources said Mr. Carter indicated that he did not expect the Soviet response to be "constructive" to the agreements between Egypt and Israel hut that he was counting on the support of European and other world leaders.]

President Sadat, seeming more subdued than his two colleagues. stressed that President Carter had been a "full partner" in the negoti-ations and added pointedly to the president that, "the continuation of your active role is indispensable." Although there seemed to be several potential pitfalls that could complicate, or even halt, progress toward a Middle East settlement, the signing of a peace agreement between Israel and Egypt in the next 90 days would do much to neutralize more militant Arab states, such as Syria, some observers felt, and would go a long way to create a de facto Middle East peace. This prospect evidently pleased the Israeli delegation great-

In the signing ceremony, an ehul-lient Prime Minister Begin had lav-ish praise for both Mr. Carter and Mr. Sadat. He joked that the summit meeting should be renamed the "Jimmy Carter Conference" and quipped that the U.S. president had worked hard at reaching an agreement — "harder than our forefa-thers did in building the pyramids."

Then, to the cheers of the audience in the East Room, Mr. Begin embraced Mr. Sadat in a long, fervent hug.

As President Carter told the television audience, two documents emerged from the Camp David summit.

One, called "a framework for the conclusion of a peace treaty be-major Israeli withdrawal, a U.S. official said, "normal relations will be established hetween Egypt and Israel." Complete Israeli withdrawal — and the turnover of Israeli air bases to Egyptian civilian control - is expected to be carried out within two to three years, the official said. However, the official revealed that the two countries were still in disagreement about the status of Israeli settlements in Sinai and that the Israeli Knesset, or parliament, would vote on this question within two weeks. The Egyptian position is that the settlements should be withdrawn while the Israelis assert that this is an issue to be settled with future negotiations. The second document, called "a framework for peace in the Middle East," was designed to encourage a negotiated settlement on the future of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, attempting to draw Jordan and Palestinian inhabitants of the occupied areas into the negotiations for the first time, as well as setting up provisions for government and security arrangements for these regions dur-ing a five-year period.

Rhodesia Country Whites Still Show Pioneer Spirit

By David Lamb

spirit and colonial temperament of white Rhodesia.

The men carry guns and wear shorts with knee socks. Their faces are weathered and there is dirt under their fingernails. They gather over bottles of Castle beer in the Cecil Hotel, talking of crops and war and mislaid dreams

Over three generations, they are quick to tell you, they shed their sweat to build a prosperous coun-try and a secure life. Now it is blood they shed to protect their place in Africa - but in unguarded moments they wonder aloud whether they have a place at all in the future of the continent.

"Twenty-two years ago I came to Rhodesia, hoping to give my two sons a better life," a ruddy man said as he waited last week with 500 other whites to hear an address by Prime Minister Ian Smith. "The British government encouraged me to come. Now it's trying to force me out of the country where I set my roots by giving the country over to the terrorists, to a gang of Marx-ists. I've got no bloody time for the Brits any more."

Smith Applauded

Like the other whites in the meeting hall, the man stood and applauded when Mr. Smith arrived. Mr. Smith came to this farming town near the Mozambique border to allay those fears of the future, to convince these people that they would have a place in Rhodesia under the internal agreement he signed last March with three moderate blacks.

Sitting on opposite sides of Queens Hall, listening intently to Mr. Smith, were two Rhodesians one young, one old - chosen at random by an interviewer. Each in his own way spoke for the mood of white Rhodesia today.

The young one was Clive Ruffell. 17, soft-spoken, red-haired, a high school student. "My future's at

Kaunda Announces Elections in Zambia

LUSAKA, Zambia, Sept. 18 (UPI) — President Kenneth Kaun-da today dissolved the National Assembly and said that be would soon appoint an electoral commission to prepare for new legislative and presidential elections.

Mr. Kaunda did not say when the elections would take place but government sources predicted that it would be next month. The last National Assembly election was in 1973, shortly after Zambia became a one-party state. Its 135 members belong to the ruling United National Independence Party.

UMTALI, Rhodesia — Here in stake here, too," be said. "Majority the highlands, where coffee and rule, a black government, it's got to conservatism flourish and war is a come. I know that I wouldn't mind daily occurrence, lies the pioneer living under a black government. It doesn't worry me that my headmaster will be black; that even the prime minister will be black. The disturbing point of view is that a black government probably will not be as efficient. I just worry that so-cial standards will deteriorate."

The other one was Robert Harris, 65, white-haired and amiable, a police reservist. "The prime minister here, he has kept us all together. People realize that. We've got to close ranks like he says.

Look, you take the Hueys that's what the Africans are called bere — and except for the odd one at the university, be wants to stay with his own people. He doesn't want to mix, to eat where we eat or live where we live. You don't find prejudice in a town like this. The Africans are darn nice. We all get along fine."

Symbolic Town

Umtali was not picked by accident for Mr. Smith's continuing blitz to sell his beleaguered - and some say, moribund — internal settlement. The town has symbolic value. Last week about 25 guerrilla mortars thundered into Umtali. And in June, memorial services for the 13 white victims of a guerrilla raid on Elim Mission were held bere in Queens Hall.

The gathering Friday was similar in format to the town hall meetings of President Carter and, although Mr. Smith received an enthusiastic welcome, he also received some tough questions for which he had no ready answers.

"Mr. Prime Minister," a woman asked, "are you aware of the situa-tion in Melsetter? People there are Arrivals Build Shacks desperate.

"Last year 20 [white] people were killed by terrorists. Land mines, explosions, ambushes, store robber ies. It's going on day after day. The terrorists at the moment seem in complete control of the district. Is there something that can be done without being detrimental to the situation for a settlement? I know the people feel the time has come for more action."

Loud applause followed. But Mr. Smith said that Rhodesian forces simply do not have the extra manpower needed to guarantee everyone's safety.

Mr. Smith reiterated his theme that the future of Rhodesia lay in gaining support for the internal settlement from the United States and Britain. He said that he believes the mood of the U.S. public might be shifting in Rhodesia's favor because of recent guerrilla atrocities.

As an indication of that swing he mentioned Sen. Barry Goldwater's accusation that the Rhodesian policies of the Carter administration were encouraging terrorism.

Since then, Mr. Coleman noted, many school districts have been desegregated through mandatory busing programs, ordered by courts or state agencies, that bring children together from widely separated

Mr. Coleman added that his 1966 report was based on data col-lected at one time with conclusions drawn by comparing youngsters in schools with different proportions of black and white students. Since then, be said, researchers have been able to follow children for several years after they switched to desegregated schools. Although Mr. Coleman has not been directly involved in any of this research, he said that a review of more than 100 desegregation studies in U.S. cities shows "no overall gains."

He said that they probably were the result of "the broader impact of desegregation in the South." rather than a direct result of blacks and whites being taught together.

Arrested as Demonstrator

Before coming to the University of Chicago in 1973, Mr. Coleman taught at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, where he also took part in civil-rights demonstrations and was arrested in one of them.

He said that he still strongly opposes legal segregation and strong-ly favors integrated schools. But he said that mandatory busing programs in many cities have been "counterproductive," because they have been followed by an extensive loss of white students. He said that he also rejects "the belief that an all-black school is inherently bad. "That has a curiously racist flavor," Mr. Coleman said, "which

I can't accept."
"There have been, and there are, all-black schools that are excellent schools by any standard," he said.

'Beyond Any Expectations'

Public Works and Inflation

It's ludicrous, but not astonishing: In the final stage of enacting the federal budget, dropped, the whole program will vanish, like

When the presidents of Egypt and the United States and the prime minister of Israel gathered at Camp David, in the Maryland hills, the Middle East situation seemed to have settled into a sharp-edged stalemate, one that contained more threats of war than promises of peace. And somehow Mr. Carter's summit assembly, behind a screen of secrecy, appeared to suggest that the screen would encourage an exchange of sharp recriminations, rather than constructive proposals. So when, after what Mr. Carter called "13 long days," the main participants appeared before television and an audience in the White House, one might have expected, at best, apologies. But that was emphati-cally not the case. The warmth, the evident enjoyment of Messrs. Carter, Begin and Sadat, were dramatically undiplomatic, "beyoud any expectations,"--- and hopeful for

And peace is to come, for Israel and Egypt, at least, within three months, if some remaining problems can be solved. In principle, the chiefs of the two states have both made compromises --- Mr. Begin on withdrawal from Sinai and the kind of autonomy the residents of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip are to enjoy during the five years before their fate is finally decided. And Mr. Sadat has not insisted on complete withdrawal immediately by Israel from all the lands taken in 1967; he is also willing to have the Palestinians move toward some kind of state, rather than enjoy one immediately.

This compromise presents serious difficulties. The issue of the Israeli settlements in the occupied lands is not wholly settled and may well offer obstacles to peace in the Knesset. And outside Egypt and Israel there are states and peoples who are vitally interested in a Middle Eastern settlement, and whose reactions could well affect those of the parties directly concerned in the Camp David negotiations. To end the wars with its neighbors, Israel must make peace with them. With Jordan this may not be too difficult now, but Lebanon must make peace with itself before it can do so with Israel - and Syria has shown no evidence of even wanting a reasonble solution. Moreover, there are other Arab states which have powerful influence, economically, on the front-line states; Saudi Arabia is one, moderate, but just how moderate? Libya is another --- making no pretense at moderation. The Soviet Union, co-chair-

Congress has fallen into a deadlock over public works. Everything else has been negotiable -- taxes, defense, pensions, all the large and genuinely hard questions. But not public works. The House wants to push into the budget another $1 billion for construc-

VIENNA - Emperor William of Germany, wear-

man with the United States of the Geneva conference which is supposed to reach final conclusions on the Middle East, has always stated that it supports the idea of an independent Israel, but the size of that Israel tends to shrink as Soviet friends among the Arabs increase their demands.

So it cannot be assumed that the negotiations for a full Egyptian-Israeli treaty will necessarily go on schedule. And it certainly cannot be taken for granted that such a treaty will serve as a model for others in the region. Indeed, it would be a mistake to allow the kind of euphoria which the Carter-Begin-Sadat trio have so often generated in the past to obscure the harshly practical facts that split up the Middle East. When it is remembered how the Sadat visit to Jerusalem inspired hopes of peace that so soon were suspended by subsequent conferences even the picture of cooperative friendship that emerged from Camp David loses some of its

But it must also be recognized that the progress at Camp David was real in areas where little progress had been made before; it cannot be forgotten that the initiatives originally sprang from the mood of the Sadat journey to Israel. There have been few diplomatic sequences quite so manic-depressive as the Begin-Sadat-Carter conferences: high joy followed by acute gloom. Some of this arose from the publicity attending the talks - not all of it, because Camp David was successfully secretive, which may convince Mr. Carter that there is something to be said for this technique. Some may have sprung from the personalities of the principal characters. In any case, however, the shifts in mood are less significant than what took place - or failed to take place --- while these moods were on display. The hard facts sometimes conflicted with, sometimes exaggerated, the moods. But the hard facts since the beginning of the Sadat-Begin-Carter association have at least been better than acute gloom seemed to imply, and progress toward a peace is being made. For this, all three men must be congratulated, and since Mr. Begin has said that the Camp David meetings must be called the Jimmy Carter Conference, the president of the United States deserves special praise for his special services in a very special diplo-

There is a kind of conservative hum in the country, and President Carter has lost more ground in the standings lately than the Boston Red Sox, but somehow these ideological and mathematical trends don't convince the political gamblers or even the Republican lead-ers that the GOP is on the verge of any spectacular revival.

The first real test of voter opinion in the state primaries didn't show much change. In general, the incumbents — meaning mainly the Democrats — were endorsed again, and the Democratic party gover-nors did very well in New York. California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Colorado.

'Sag'

Thus the Wall Street Journal reported a "sag" in Republican bopes in the governors' races, and George Gallup has been finding ever since June that the Republicans cannot count on very big gains in this November's congressional elec-

Even at the beginning of the summer, when President Carter was falling rapidly in the popularity polls, Gallup found that the Democratic party candidates for the House of Representatives were at least bolding steady, and that the political composition of the House was likely to remain next year very much as it is today - roughly 60-40 in the Democrats' favor. Since then President Carter has been getting some credit for passing the Panama Canal treaty, and his civil service reform bill, and for his persistence in trying to find some kind of compromise, bowever unsatisfactory, in the tangles over energy policy and the politics of the Middle East.

Meanwhile, as Carter's standing in the polls has declined, the maneuvering for the presidential nominations in 1980 has already begun, and here the contrast be-tween the two major parties is very

Risk

Twice in the last generation, when they were out of the White House, the Democrats had risked their fortunes on comparatively young men — John Kennedy in 1960 and Jimmy Carter in 1976. And even now, when they occupy the White House and have large majorities in both the House and Senate, they still have some younger backup candidates on the bench if Carter falters — Gov. Brown of California, Gov. Carey of New York, and Sen. Kennedy of

The Republicans also have some promising young candidates — par-ticularly George Bush of Texas, former head of the CIA and head of the U.S. Diplomatic Missions to China and the United Nations; and Howard Baker of Tennessee, the Republican leader of the Senate. But the spotlight of the developing GOP Presidential campaign is on the men and issues of the past -Reagan, Ford, and Connelly - all former" somethings, and all in their 60s.

Dissent on Angola: Drawing a Lesson

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

VV bit of a spollsport in com-menting on Nathaniel Davis's account of his dissenter's role in the ill-fated U.S. intervention in Ango-la in 1975. Still an active diplomat. Davis was the State Department's top Africa hand at the time. He writes in the new Foreign Affairs.

It's a good insider's story. It adds something to the historical record.
That the State Department authorized publication underlines its intent to treat troubles in Africa in African rather than strictly Soviet-U.S. terms, and to look first for po-litical solutions rather than military ones, as Davis urged in Angola. The Ford administration went the other way, believing that Moscow had to be confronted there and embacking on a covert military opera-non, soon aborted.

Moreover, the department's postpublication second thoughts notwithstanding its imprimatur for a still-serving ambassador's memoir of dissent speaks well for the administration's professed desire to encourage civil servants to offer their superiors their best judgment.

Good Sense

Yet, there are substantial reasons, I think, even for people who feel as I do that Davis acted with integrity and good sense, to hold their enthusiasm in check. The Davis case has in it more lessons than he has chosen to draw.

There is, first of all, the matter of process. Then assistant secretary for Africa, Davis is largely satisfied with the opportunity he had to make his case, to both Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and President Ford. His case, vindicated by events, was that the proposed co-vert military-aid program in Ango-la would neither stay secret nor succeed. But at least in this instance and on the operations level, Kissinger used the bureaucracy fairly, though he chose to exercise his policymaker's prerogative and set Davis's counsel aside.

There was a serious procedural flaw all the same. As a late and re-luctant recruit to the Africa post, under a secretary whose basic course had long since been set, Davis did not feel up to offering advice on the larger strategic ques-non of whether it was wise and nec-essary to "contain" the Soviet Union on that particular ground. Nor, evidently, did Kissinger seek his advice on that level. The question Davis answered (Will the operation work?) simply did not correspond to the question evidently on Kiss-

Seemingly, the obvious remedy is to see to it — by appointment, con-sultation, discipline, etc. — that policymakers and operational aider are on the same wavelength. Yet from the public's standpoint, an aide's best service may lie not in facilitating but in questioning poli-cy — on the relevant level. Davis questioned policy, but not on the level on which it was actually being

It makes me hope that the requi-site debate, on the level where it most counts, has been built into the Carter administration by the president's selection of men with different emphases, Cyrus Vance's on problem-solving and Zbigniew Brzezinski's on strategic design, as his two chief foreign-policy aides One to watch.

Second, there is the matter of openness. One can hall the appearance of this sort of still-policy-relevant insider's account without being certain that the State Department — let alone other departments — is now the ardent patror of dissent. Davis's target is, after all, a former secretary whose policy on the particular matter he writes about has been conspiculously reversed by this administration's foreign-policy fisseos.

Painful

There is, moreover, a sharp and There is, moreover, a sharp and painful contrast between the Carter State Department's treatment of Davis, who reports on one U.S. debacle in 1975, and the Carter CIA's treatment of Frank Snepp, the former CIA analyst prosecuted for his book recounting another U.S. debacle of 1975, the fall of Saigon. The material that the State Department allowed Davis to publish seems to me little different in substance from the material for which the CIA hauled Snepp into court.
The CIA will not get the support it seeks for its outrage at Philip Agee's publication of real sources and-methods secrets if it does not play it fair with people like Snepp, whose material is merely embarrassing.

Finally, I would wager that all through the government there are wounded dissenters who envy Nat Davis for the help his department gave him in declassifying secret documents and permitting him to publish his self-vindicating piece It's a good thing that the State Department did, but a rare thing. It sure beats forcing aggrieved bu-reaucrats to stew or to leak.

-Letters-Aggressiveness

Joseph Kraft, with whom, by the way, I had the pleasure to converse recently in Moscow, wrote (IHT, Aug. 22) that the nature U.S.-Chinese relations will assume may depend, so to speak, on the degree of "Russian aggressiveness" toward the rest of the world. The greater the "aggressiveness," it follows, the bigger the U.S. aid to China. But Mr. Kraft does not specify what he means by "Soviet aggressiveness," believing obviously that the phrase has become so stereotyped in the Western press in the ast few years that it needs no explanation. . Nevertheless, it remains unclear

Does he include in the notion of "aggressiveness" the repeated Sovi-et offers to China to build relations on the principles of peaceful coexis tence? Or what about the Soviet idea of collective security in Asia? Or the Soviet intention . . . "to work consistently for the advancement of detente, the expansion of mutually beneficial cooperation between states and, above all, the termination of the arms race and a switchover to disarmament?" Or, perhaps, Joseph Kraft thinks that the U.S. aid to China should depend on the American — in my view - very free-interpretation of the aims of Soviet policy in this or that African country?

Mr. Kraft also repeated the allegation that China is "in encirclement by the Soviet Union," again leaving unclear the question: Did he mean encirclement with the help of South Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Burma, India, Nepal or some other states located along the perimeter of China, whose existence he alone knows? California growers alone export an estimated $20 million worth each year, and recently people in several Mideast and Far East countries, where economies are lagging and profitable exports are being sought, are investing time and ef-fort to break into the market.

While climates of those countries are ideal for growing the flowers, one thing is lacking — the biologi-cal expertise to produce them on a commercial scale. So they have turned to Dr. Ardit-

Japanese Public Baths Go Down Drain

By Chikako Yatabe

TOKYO (AP) — Affluence mote bot-springs resorts. I seems to be sending another Japanese tradition down the drain —the public bath.

Many would lament the passing of what for generations has been a center of social activity and a symbol of togetherness. But the latest statistics show that in Tokyo alone 248 public bath houses have closed down since 1968.

While 2,400 remain in the city, a oumber are hanging on only through side activities such as coin laundries or through the loyalty of longtime customers. And the cause of their disappearance - rapid growth of modern apartments with private baths — is continuing.

It is part of a trend in which reinforced concrete has put the stamp of anonymity on many of Japan's cities, and individualism is taking over increasingly from the old ways of doing things in a group.

Six Centuries

The sento - "money bath" in Japanese - dates back more than six centuries. In earlier days, men and women used the same facility without the barrier of modesty, false or otherwise. Outside influences and changing times brought an end to that, and today mixed Japan's major urban areas - 47 bathing is found only in a few remote bot-springs resorts,

Now the separate sections for the sexes provide two buge tubs, one containing hot water and the other hotter, near scalding, to meet individual desires.

There is space outside the tubs where taps provide water for actual washing and rinsing off. This is never dooe in the tub itself, which is only for soaking and relaxing.

Like everything else, the cost of the public bath has gone up. Today it costs the equivalent of about 80 cents. Ten years ago it cost about 8

At ooe time there also was an ex-tra charge for women for hair washing. That was dropped after men started letting their hair grow longer and the women cried disbath tradition than just a place to become clean. While Japan's economy has boomed, housing has lagged. Mil-lions still bye in tiny houses or apartments without individual baths or sewer connections.

In most new housing developments, a private bath is taken for granted. Many Japanese aspire to such living as sooo as they have the means. An ambitious five-year plan calls for 8.6 million new housing units by 1980, miniature in size, as-tronomical in cost, but modern.

The non-smoker.

Nobody likes to see the skies around an airport looking as though somebody has been burning old tyres. Pollution is ugly, it's uneconomic, and it's second only to noise in the environmentalists' catalogue of what they dislike most about aircraft. The A300 is very clean, on smoke emission with a carbon particle emission index of only 12. (You can't see carbon emission at all, until you reach a threshold of at least 27.) This low figure also means that the airline operator is getting better value out of his fuel.

Thanks to its advanced engines the A300 emits only a tiny fraction of invisible pollutants compared with other aircraft.

Which leaves noise. The A300 is the quietest of the new quiet generation. Quieter not only on a noise-scale, but on a time-scale too. Because the A300 gets higher quicker.

So when an airline chooses the A300, it's not just making the wisest economic choice. It's helping make the environment a pleasanter place for all of us.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 18 (AP-DJ) — The European Economic Commu-nity moved forward today with its ambitious plans to set up a Europe-an Monetary System (EMS) which an Monetary System (EMS) which is lo stabilize exchange rates in Europe, West German Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer report-

Mr. Matthoefer presided over a meeting of EEC finance ministers, which discussed key problems connected with establishing such an EMS that is also aimed at helping the battered dollar.

"No doubt, we made a big step forward today," he said after the meeting. "I'm confident, the new monetary system will be operation-Al early 1979."

He also said the meeting last Thursday and Friday between French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had given "a new impetus" to work on the monetary system. "Things are movement a head with new momentum." ing ahead with new momentum,

Broad Consensus

He noted that a broad consensus existed "among most EC members" that set exchange rates floating around a bandspread — a so-called parity grid — should be established for currencies in the EMS.

Concurring with a Belgian pro-posal that had been submitted at expert level, most EEC members also agreed with the principle of using a weighted basket of EEC currencies as an "early-warning system" that should trigger consultation among monetary authorities on how to counter speculative pressure on a currency, according to Mr. Matthoefer.

British Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey appeared to be isolated with his preference of a basket of EEC currencies to be used as the numeraire for calculating exchange rates in the EMS.
But, British sources reported that

There was broad agreement among all participants at the monetary discussions today that a credit facility amounting to at least 25 billion European units of account (EUA), currently equalling about $32.4 billion, should be made avail-able, probably in short-term swaps and in medium-term credit to put EMS on the road early next year.

Desnite Avgret Veri Despite August Fall

Mr. Healey, Italian Treasury Minister Filippo Pandolfi and Ireland's George Colley all stressed the need to link an appropriate transfer of resources — from the wealthier to the poorer EC mem-bers — with the establishment of an EMS in the community. And, officials reported, there is general consensus that efforts to eliminate still existing divergences in economic trends in the commumity are essential as part of the op-eration of the EMS. The need to reduce inflation rates to the lowest level in the EEC was stressed. But, conference sources said, neither the British, Italians nor Irish insisted that a resources transfer scheme must be in place when the EEC heads of state and government chiefs meet for their next summit in Brussels Dec. 4-5 to make the final decisions on the new monetary system.

Farther Work

The EEC economie policy committee was instructed to continue its detailed work on an appropriate resources transfer system, Mr. Matthoefer reported. He said the committee of EEC central bankers and the EEC Monetary Committee would now have to continue work on the EMS, especially looking into the problems connected with the currency basket for an early-warn-

FTC Probes Cal Standard's Amax Bid

Federal regulators are intensifying their study of Standard Oil of California's attempted takeover of Amax Inc. The Federal Trade Commission, which has been scrudnizing Amax-Cal Standard relations for three years, is stepping up its inquiry into anti-trust implications of a possible combination. It's un-derstood that officials of Amax, which has rejected Cal Standard's overtures, are aiding the FTC in its investigation. Amax's board two weeks ago rejected a $57-a-share takeover offer from Cal Standard. The proposed merger would have been valued at $1.5 billion to $2 billion.

Empain-Schneider Sales Gain

Empain-Schneider, the Franco-Belgian industrial conglomerate, posted net sales for the first six months of 1978 of 14.1 billion francs (about $3.23 billion), up by 17.5 percent from the 12 billion re-ported for the first half of 1977. Orders received during the same period also totalled 14.1 billion francs, a drop of 18 percent from the 17.2 billion francs of the first half of 1977. The group said the decline in orders stemmed from its nuclear subsidi-aries, Framatome and Novatome, whose orders up to the end of June totalled 140 million francs, compared with 3.9 billion francs a year ago.

Oil Concerns, Iran Agree on Uptake

Western oil negotiators and the National Iranian Oil Co. bave agreed in principle that the Western oil companies will take an average of 3.3 million barrels a day of Iranian crude for export this year, sources said. They said this was one of the points of accord at recent discussions though both sides failed to es-tablish a long-term agreement. Stumbling blocks in the talks included financial arrangements and the exact formula under which Iran would be granted "most-favored-nation" status in dealings with the 14-company Western oil consortium.

Dollar Ends Day Mixed

LONDON, Sept. 18 JAP-DJ) — The dollar oscillated widely against most major currencies today following a string of news develop-ments from Washington and Brussels to end mixed in nervous foreign exchange trading. With relatively modest volume but large rate movements, the dol-lar appeared to lack a definitive trend as many operators kept to the sidelines or maintained tightly squared positions.

Initial reaction to the outcome of the Mideast summit meeting was positive, with the dollar rising smartly in early dealings, only to ease later on profit-taking and un-certainty about the Camp David agreements. The dollar was also helped by speculation that U.S. banks' prime lending rate may be boosted to 9.75 percent by the end of the month following Friday's quarter-point increase to 9.5 per-

Further downward pressure was put on the dollar by news that Eu-ropean Economic Community finance ministers, meeting in Brussels, appeared ready to go ahead with a plan to create a European Monetary System.

The dollar posted its sharpest de-cline of the day against the Swiss franc, losing 1 centime at 1.5795 francs. Against the Deutsche mark, the dollar eased to 1,9745 DM, down 21 points from late Friday.

THE OTHER HALF A Self-Portrait By Kenneth Clark, Harper and Row. Illustrated, 259 pp. $12.95.

Reviewed by Robert Kirsch

KENNETH Clark is best known in the United States as the marvelously eloquent guide to the TV series "Civilisation." He is. in his life and decency, the epitome of the civilized man, which is to say a thinking, feeling, perceptive and knowledgeable man, a balanced

This is the second volume of his autobiography, covering the period from his 36th year to the present, or more exactly to the death of his wife, Jane, whom he deeply loved, and the account of whose last years brought tears to my eyes. I share that tendency with Clark, who reveals he cannot read his favorite poems even to himself without weeping and therefore cannot quote poetry in a lecture. Typically, he reassures the lachrymose reader that this is a quality shared "with all the great soldiers of the early 19th century."

This flowing emotion goes along with a sensibility which is as toughminded as a critic's needs to be. Clark knows well that the secret is balance. Everything in the response to art or performance begins with enjoyment or the lack of it, with liking or loving or disliking or even hating. But the best of these is loving.

There is a good deal in these pages about the making of the "Civilisation" series, in which Clark, after a lesson or two from the British comedian Arthur Askey (Askey walked up to the camera and shook his fist at it), began to perform as if he were born to it.

Since Askey's lesson, he writes, Since Askey's lesson, he writes,
"I have never thought of the camera for a second. I have felt that I was talking to a friend or, more often, soliloquizing. As a young man I used to take long walks across the moors and had formed the habit — said to be a bad habit — of talking to myself. I believe these soliloquies were the foundation of my success as a television tion of my success as a television

He had patience as well, though oddly, in his other roles as professor, museum director, civil servant, he was "said to be an impatient man." Before the camera his patience was limitless while cameras and lighting were set, while waiting for the weather to change. One of the advantages: He could see great works of an under conditions long since impossible for ordinary visitors. He and his crew had the Sistine Chapel to themselves for five hours. The prolonged company of Michelangelo is marvelous but very exhausting."

Clark can make a wry point about the monks of the Santo in Padua, who had the reputation of acting offensively to art lovers in-terested in closely inspecting their high altar. A 100-pound tip "made them look as genial as monks on an old-fashioned calendar, and we were allowed to shine our light on Donatello's reliefs of the Miracles of S. Antonio.

Coming so close, he is able to see how impossible it is "to tell from photographs . . . the incredible beauty of their execution.

· Yet he is realistic about the success of the series. "I was brought up to believe that any work of art, music or literature that is enormously popular must have something seriously wrong with it. I see no reason why 'Civilisation' should be an ex-ception to this rule," he writes, and then - with a characteristic hook - adds "but I have never discovcred precisely what is wrong with it, if it is not taken too seriously. I used to think that its success in the

Solution to Previous Puzzle

United States and Canada was due to the reassurance it gave to bour-geois values. But this does not account for its equally great success in Poland and Romania. I think I know the answer, but will not pursue the question further."

Everywhere there are hints to the answer. I would guess that "Civilisation" is about love, evoking in those who watched the program a recognition of the passion and aspiration of human beings seeking not merely to survive but in some way to endure; an immortality, imbed-ded in and crystalized by their art and artifacts, their architecture and literature. Speaking about his last program, a film on early Egypt, he refers to the qualities which had emerged by the year 2750 before Christ in the Old Kingdom: ". All the qualities that we value, or used to value, in our own civilisation: a belief in the individual as moral being; pride in the merciful execution of justice, a well-organized system of government, a sense of the beauty and dignity of man, who had a soul that would survive him after death; an aware-ness of animals as something very close to ourselves which could be lovable as well as useful; geometry and its application to stone archi-tecture; and above all an art that combined grandeur with humani-

With his customary candor, he says that his message, "which had obsessed me for five years, hardly emerged." Nowhere does Clark de-lude himself. He knows that seemli-ness is a trait of the civilized; he is aware of the power of nature and biology over man, whether it be ships tossed like toys in a tidal wave at Palermo harbor or the body giving out against the onslaught of strokes and illness, leaving the dying only the option of trying to go out with dignity.

There is much of the entertainer. in him and he sees it as a mistake to draw too sharp a line between entertainment and education. Educado what you don't want to do.

But the best learning comes from "falling in love with a subject, a period, a style, an individual hero, that one absorbs something so that it becomes a part of one's living tissue." That love is evident in Kenneth Clark, not only for his work. from saving paintings from bombing in the war years to oursing his wife in the time of her need. He is an exemplary man and this auto-biography, though devoid of self-analysis and completely self-critical, is equally a model of honesty and the impulse toward the civi-

BRIDGE

On the diagramed deal, East-West combined to produce a good cooperative defense. Their oppo-nents reached three no-trump as shown after West had made a takeout double showing the major suits. It is easy to see that South has eight sure tricks, and it would seem that he is virtually certain to make a ninth in either of the major suits.

Many expert partnerships have abandoned traditional fourth-best leads against no-trump. Instead, they play "attitude," which means that a low card shows serious interest in persevering with the suit led. Following this method, West led the spade three and South made the normal play of a low card from the dummy. He thought that the ace was oo his left, but it did not seem worth taking the risk of baving the defense take the first five tricks in the suit by playing the king. As it turned out, he had now missed his only chance to take nine tricks.

East won with the queen and thought it over. The failure to lead hearts suggested that his partner was not very strong in that suit, and continuing spades was likely to give declarer his ninth trick, since he was marked with at least six clubs. South's failure to play the spade king at the first trick made it clear that he held the guarded jack of that suit.

So, East shifted to a low diamond, which proved the key to the winning defense. The defense was

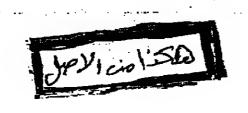

By Alan Truscott now headed for five tricks, with three in diamonds and two in spades, before the declarer could score his ninth. Io an attempt to shut out the third diamond trick, South ducked when the jack appeared on his left, and ducked again when the queen was played. It might seem that South was now in control, but East made another key play. He evertook his partner's diamond queen with the king and shifted to hearts. This was the final nail in declarar's coffin, for the defense was now certain to take five tricks, two in spades; two in diamonds and one in hearts for down one.

Now, the spud is one of nature's best-designed products: It is born in a sturdy package, with wonderful shelf life. Yet we haul it from field to factory, peel and slice it hy machine, cook it in hot grease, dose it with additives, wrap it in a petroleum or natural-gas derivative, freeze it. store it in a frozen warehouse, haul it across the country in a diesel refrigerated truck, store it in another frozen warehouse, deliver it in a reefer truck to a supermarket freezer, move it to a kitchen freezer, and, eventually, rebeat it.

Then we eat it.
What for?

At Best

At hest, the fries will be crisp outside but mushy inside, tasting only of starch and stale, overheated cooking oil. Freezing destroys texture and damages flavor: repeated partial thawing and reheating does the rest.

So why do we buy this prod-uct? One reason is that the big packers and fast-food chains can afford to advertise, and the small farmer and restaurateur cannot. Another reason is that food writers tend to agree with the advertisers, who pay the bills for those fat food supplements in which the writers appear, McDonald's frozen fries, for example, have been called "crisp" and "first-rate" by Craig Claiborne and "surprisingly good" by Julia Child, both fans of supermarket goodies. Still, one may object, those frozen fries are convenient. True, making French fries in the home kitchen is a nuisance which does not excuse the restaurant operators. Much less does it excuse their growing use of all sorts of precooked frozen foods — TV dinners at liftedpinkie prices.

Big Operation

Freezing is a big-company, capital-intensive operation, which accelerates the transfer of food production thousands of miles from U.S. cities. This is good for large processors and store chains since it provides them with standardized supplies in great volume, while it eliminates competition from small farmers and small local businesses. Processing these foods, packaging them, keeping them frozen for months in warehouses, on the road, and at the point of sale, and then reheating them all waste enormous amounts of fuel.

Ecologically, energetically, and gastronomically, it's mur-der. Also, it's fattening, because more fats are used in processed foods than are used in normal cooking. Next to sugar, fat is the biggest ingredient in our pro-cessed diet. And it's certainly not cheaper for the consumer.

Now, what could be more convenient for the home cook than to wash a couple of pota-toes and pop them into a good hot oven (425)? It's just as easy as heating frozen spuds, and it's cheaper and miles better from a taste and nutritional standpoint. (Only for God's sake, don't wrap them in foil).

Or skip the oven and steam but fine pork drippings, chicken fat, or butter will be delicious. Season as above and serve with finely chopped garlic and Italian parsiey.

Pommes Anna is an elegant dish and a favorite of ours. Here is a free-form version that can be prepared without the traditional two-sided pan and with a good deal less trouble: Slice raw potatoes evenly and thinly (less than one-eigth inch), dry them well in a towel, and lay them in a lavisb-ly buttered shallow haking dish an iron skillet, for example. Salt and pepper them, pour melted hutter over them, and mixing with your hands, make sure that each slice is nicely coated. Place the pan in a 400

If the layer is thin, the pota-toes will cook and become delectably crisp in surprisingly little time. (You may speed up the cooking time by starting the po-tatoes on top of the stove as if sauteing them.) When they are done, pour off the excess butter; this is the only tricky moment Use a lid or large spatula to hold the potatoes as you tip the pan. Serve in the baking dish, or invert on a large serving dish.

Note: You will need at least two tablespoons of butter for each potato, but you will recover a good deal of that in the form of clarified butter, which is excellent to refrigerate for future frying needs. It should not be necessary to add that one should make double use of the oven whenever possible. We do want to save fuel, don't we?

PEOPLE: Greek Astrologer 1. News for Christina Greek Astrologer Has

Christina Onassis Kanzov recently scuttled rumors that her marriage to Sergei Kanzov was breaking up, but the rumor mill grinds on. Now a rumor has her pregnant. That's the word in Athens from Katerina Elpidakis, the Greek astrologer who correctly predicted Christina's second divorce. Says she, "Christina is definitely pregnant and is most likely to have a boy, probably her only child." Her gynecologist, Dr. only child." Her gyncoonges.

Effic Arabadji — back from 10 days in Moscow - isn't talking. In fact, she's in hiding in Athens to avoid reporters.

It took a squad of London police to keep photographers away from Frank Sinatra. Sinatra arrived at Heathrow Airport flanked by his own bodyguards, and one of them got into action immediately—grahbing a photographer hy the throat and snarling. "Get lost or I'll tear your nose off." Sinatra, with wife, Barbara, on his arm, walked through the melee to his Concorde jetliner, smiling and waving while cops broke up the growing brawl. He could afford to smile. He'd just netted nearly $500,000 for one week's engagement at the Royal Festival Hall.

Nigel," by Sir Welter Scott, was checked out in August, 1931, from the Public Library, and after 47 years it is finally back on the shelf, sporting an overdue charge of $291.40. Spotted at a rummage sale by a volunteer library nide, the book was returned last week. A library spokesman totaled up the overdue fine but said it probably won't be collected. The book's card number was reassigned long ago, she said, and the name of the book borrower is nearly impossible to

Lan Lan, the panda, has yet to show any definite indication of pregnancy, despite persistent signs that next month she might produce the first giant panda cuh ever born outside China, the Tokyo Zoo said. Zoo spokesman Ryoji Seshimo said that the 9-year-old Lan Lan is leading a normal life - munching bamboo leaves, the favorite Chinese cuisine of pandas - and sleeping well in air-conditioned quarters. The 224-pound Lan Lan and her 7-yearold 250-pound male companion, Kan Kan, mated in mid-May, If

It's pretty well known that while Harry Truman's old desk sign "The "Buck Stops Here" has been restored to the Jimmy Carter Oval Office, it is relegated to a bookcase at one side and is not on the desk itself. What may not be so well known is that the only motto sign on Carter's formal desk now is one that reads: "Oh God, thy sea is so great and my boat is so small." It's: said to be a favorite motto of Adm. Hyman Rickover, Carter's one-time

Mistislav Rostropovich played a recital in the East Room of the White House before an invited audience of several hundred persons; who gave him a prolonged ovation. He was introduced by Rosslym Carter as the "world's greatest cellist and also a composer and conductor." Referring to him by his nickname, Mrs. Carter said: "Mr. Rostropovich — Slava — has been honored around the world and he honors us by his presence here this afternoon. I'm very sorry that Jimmy can't be here ... He looked forward to this afternoon for a long time." The president was at Camp David, Md., winding up talks looking for a peaceful settle-ment in the Mideast. Last week Carter had to skip a fiesta for stock-car enthusiasts for the same reason. Rostropovich, who is music director of the Washington-based National Symphony Orchestra, was accompanied on the piano by his daughter Elena, 20, a student at the Annie Juliard School of Music in New Afternoon York. His other daughter, Olga, a cellist also studying at Juliard turned the pages for her sister,
